Fragile Truce Is in Effect; 3-Nation Cyprus Talks Set

Air Strikes Are Reported After Accord

From Wire Dispatches
NICOSIA, July 22.—A fragile truce went into effect this afternoon after a day of heavy fighting as both Turks and Greeks made last-minute efforts to improve their military positions on the island.

The United Nations announced tonight that the cease-fire appeared to be holding. Senior UN officials said reports indicated that at 1945 GMT "all was quiet throughout the island and... the cease-fire is holding."

In London, Foreign Secretary James Callaghan announced that Britain, Turkey and Greece would begin talks about the Cyprus situation in Geneva later this week. The three countries are the guarantors of Cyprus independence, according to the 1960 Zurich pact ending the island's status as a British crown colony.

Officials here said they thought that the talks might begin Wednesday.

Turkey has accepted the invitation. Greece has not yet made known its choice of a date.

In Washington, Archbishop Makarios called the cease-fire significant but only a "first step toward the return of normalcy."

Archbishop Makarios, who was ousted as President of Cyprus a week ago in a coup led by Greek officers, made the statement on his arrival in Washington for a meeting with Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Mr. Kissinger and Archbishop Makarios later described their meeting as a "useful and constructive exchange of views."

They agreed to meet again next Monday in Washington.

Council Adjourns Debate
At the United Nations, the Security Council adjourned its Cyprus debate today without immediately setting a date for its next meeting.

About an hour before the 1400 GMT cease-fire went into effect, the Turks launched a major air attack on the resort city of Famagusta on the southeastern coast, hitting a number of public buildings and at least eight high-rise beach hotels, inflicting heavy damage and causing many casualties.

Witnesses said that at least 50 persons were killed, 20 of them foreign tourists. However, the figures could not be confirmed.

The witnesses said that two of the Turkish attacks were aimed at Greek Cypriot National Guard camps at both ends of the wide beach.

But they said that the third attack struck right in the middle of the waterfront hotel complex without any apparent military targets in sight.

After the truce went into effect, some artillery exchanges could be heard at the British military base on the southern coast. There were also reports that the Turks had bombed the Nicosia airport after the truce went into effect.

A total communications blackout throughout the island made it impossible to determine whether there were any other violations.

Rumors of a Shakeup in Regime Sweep Athens

By Alvin Shuster

ATHENS, July 22 (NYT).—Greeks reacted to the cease-fire in Cyprus today with relief, disillusion and mild panic over widespread rumors of impending changes in the Greek government.

Several diplomats reported signs of strains within the military-backed government over the handling of the crisis, provoked by Greek officers on the island who overthrew President Makarios a week ago. Reports surged through the city that some of the present leaders soon would be ousted in another coup.

Many Greeks blamed the present government for bringing the nation to the edge of war with neighboring Turkey, a conflict between NATO allies avoided by the early-morning announcement of the cease-fire agreement. They also expressed what several described as "shame" that the events of the last week led to criticism of Greece by virtually every country in the world.

"The whole thing left us with absolutely no friends," an Athenian said today. "We gained nothing from it except to have a lot more Turks on Cyprus. But what really worries us is what comes next in Athens. Someone will have to pay."

There were some strange occurrences suggesting changes might well be impending. "There was a total blackout in Salonika in northern Greece, and police in Athens were telling some homeowners to expect the same here because of 'rumors,'" Athens also remained largely cut off from the outside because of serious communications troubles.

U.S. officials, who conducted the negotiations for the cease-fire here and in Ankara, were said to have detected wavering and uncertainty among the Greek officials. The Greeks were described as unsure whether they had the authority to say "yes" or "no" to the various proposals.

Early this morning, for example, it was understood that Joseph Sisco, the U.S. Under Secretary of State, who shuttled between the two capitals of the NATO allies, had to contact four or five Greek leaders individually before he felt confident that Athens would agree to the plan.

A two-hour delay in the public announcement by Athens of acceptance of the cease-fire strengthened the reports of internal problems.

Tanks in City
Athens, a city which thrives on whisper, was particularly seething and nervous today. When a group of tanks moved through an area of the city from the tank headquarters to the railroad station, reportedly en route to Salonika—where rumors said the Army III Corps was in revolt—the word spread and Greeks promptly closed their shops and rushed home. They did not re-open.

The airport remained closed, and banks opened briefly only to change money for tourists. Athenians complained that they were running out of money because of their inability to withdraw from their accounts.

There was an ugly scene today in Athens when about 100 demonstrators broke into the British Embassy, broke windows and smashed a dozen embassy cars, including the ambassador's Rolls Royce. The cost of the damage was estimated at $100,000. The police stood by and did nothing in what was clearly a protest sanctioned by those in power.

EEC Backs U.K. In Cyprus Crisis
BRUSSELS, July 22 (UPI).—Britain's eight partners in the European Economic Community late tonight threw their unanimous support behind the initiative Britain is taking, as one of the guarantors of Cypriot sovereignty, to bring an immediate end to hostilities between Greeks and Turks on Cyprus.

A communiqué, issued after the EEC members' foreign ministers held a political cooperation session, expressed full support of Britain's initiative. It pleaded for an effective application of today's cease-fire. It asked that both Greeks and Turks cooperate fully with UN forces on Cyprus and help to restore constitutional order on the island.

"The EEC member nations reminded Greece, Turkey and Cyprus that all three countries enjoy privileged economic relations with the EEC, coupling this reminder with an appeal to end the hostilities immediately."

Turkish Premier Sees Danger That Fighting Will Resume

By William J. Coughlin

ANKARA, July 22.—Premier Bülent Ecevit said today there is great danger that fighting will continue on Cyprus despite the cease-fire. He added that Turkish troops will fire back if fired upon.

He told a crowded press conference that Turkish forces, reinforced during the night by additional troops, tanks and artillery, had seized all of the port town of Kyrenia and all of Kyrenia Province by the time the cease-fire went into effect.

Mr. Ecevit said that a "void of political authority on Cyprus" will make it extremely difficult to enforce a cease-fire by the Greek Cypriots.

He said that Turkish troops had had to await tanks and artillery before pushing across the mountains toward the airport. Earlier, Turkish military communications had reported the landing of paratroopers near the airport and fierce fighting there.

Regarding reports that Kyrenia still was in Greek-Cypriot hands, Mr. Ecevit said that Turkish troops had taken the entire port and he lauded the "great success" of the Turkish Army.

He said there had been friendly appeals from the United States for a cease-fire but denied reports that Washington had threatened to withdraw military and economic aid if Ankara did not agree.

He described his telephone talk with U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as very friendly and said there were no threats.

"We have a common interest in the area," Mr. Ecevit said. American diplomatic sources in Ankara were extremely pessimistic about how well the cease-fire would hold up.

Turkish radio continued to report the massacre of Turkish Cypriots on the island and even Turkish reporters pressed the Premier during his news conference about the failure of the Turkish military to prevent such killings.

"We have considered it our duty to respond to the United Nations call for a cease-fire in Cyprus," Ecevit said. "The cease-fire is effective as of now."

Uganda Claims 'Spies' From Tanzania Seized

KAMPALA, July 22 (AP).—The Ugandan government today reported the arrest of more than 100 "spies" from Tanzania. The government radio said that a Tanzanian was shot by Ugandan soldiers and was in serious condition.

Reliable sources said that about 4,000 Ugandan troops were in position along the 100-mile border with Tanzania. No fighting was reported.

$500 Million Obtained in Iran Credits

U.K. Budget to Stimulate Economy

By Terry Roberts

LONDON, July 22 (NYT).—The government announced a series of measures today to prop up the ailing British economy, curtail inflation and bolster public confidence in the business outlook.

In a long-awaited interim budget message, Denis Healey, Chancellor of the Exchequer, said the economic stimulus was needed to head off a serious recession in the months ahead.

At the same time, the government closed that Britain had arranged with Iran for a line of credit of $500 million ($120 million to help compensate for a British trade deficit. This would be in addition to a $250 million loan from commercial banks arranged four months ago.

In a 16-minute speech in the last of Commons, Mr. Healey said to allay some of the fears he had led to a sharp decline in the stock market, a weakening of the pound and general public pessimism over the state of the economy.

Labor's Critics
Critics and political opponents of the Labor administration of Prime Minister Harold Wilson immediately charged that Mr. Healey's so-called "mini-budget" had misinterpreted solely by the desire to carry over with the voters before a national election.

Mr. Wilson's administration as the parliamentary majority needs to pass major legislation is committed to do so as soon as it feels safe to win that majority, knowledgeable sources predict the vote will be held in October.

November, before Britain faces another potentially difficult winter.

Some economists have expressed fear that any economic stimulus at the present time would tend to entrench inflation, rather than use it, by encouraging more spending and adding to the strain on Britain's resources.

But Mr. Healey has repeatedly made it clear his feeling that over-inflation would be preferable under-stimulation.

He was interrupted repeatedly by heckling and jeering in the Tory benches in the House, especially when he was making government measures to the Tories interpreted as a politically motivated.

He has measures and other sessions will cost about $700 million a year, but Mr. Healey said the government's borrowing program, representing its deficit, would be increased by only about $340 million. He said the most dramatic measure announced by the government was a reduction in the value-added tax that is charged on goods and many services.

tax will be cut from 10 per cent to 8 per cent next Monday.

Price Reduction
As a result, the public should see a drop in prices next week. The move was seen to receive enthusiastic support at a time when retail price index has risen more than 16 per cent in a Healey also said a further million in food subsidies, for household flour, would be available from the $500 million committed for subsidies by the government's first budget in 1974.

Subsidies already exist on bread, butter and milk. Some owners will be given a 10 per cent real-estate tax cut to the extent that the increases exceeded 20 per cent this year. This measure, plus the cuts in the value added tax and the subsidies, should reduce retail prices by more than 1.5 per cent in the next three months, the chancellor said.

Moreover, he added, some of the automatic "threshold" wage increases that are set off when the retail price index rises by a certain amount will be avoided, thereby easing the cost pressures on businesses and minimizing reducing the index by an additional 1 per cent for an overall drop of 2.5 per cent.

In addition to these measures, the government plans to increase its subsidies for workers employed outside Britain's major industrial centers from $150 a week for each male employee to $23.

The doubling of the so-called regional employment premium is aimed at encouraging employment in parts of Britain where unemployment is greatest.

Whether in Nation's Interest
House Panel Asked to Weigh The Effects of Impeachment

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI).—The House Judiciary Committee, beginning a climactic week today, heard Republican counsel Sam Garrison argue that it should consider whether the nation's best interest would be served if President Nixon were impeached.

The panel is to decide in a few days whether to recommend the President's impeachment for Watergate-related offenses and today heard the spokesman for Mr. Nixon's Republican supporters argue the minority case.

In a legal brief and oral argument presented to a closed session, Mr. Garrison said it is "not only proper but necessary for Congress, having concluded that an officer has engaged in conduct for which he could properly be impeached, then to step back and assess the situation more generally to determine whether the best interests of the country would be served by his removal or continuance in office."

In another argument, the minority counsel attacked the impeachment case presented by majority counsel John Doar as based not on evidence but rather on inferences.

Mr. Doar had argued that the President's refusal to comply with the committee subpoenas for additional tapes of presidential conversations undermined the ability of the House of Representatives to conduct its constitutional inquiry and threatened "the integrity of the impeachment process."

Charge of Lying to FBI Dismissed

1 of 4 Ehrlichman Conviction Counts Dropped

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI).—U.S. District Judge Gerhard Gesell today threw out the conviction of John Ehrlichman on one of the perjury counts against him.

Judge Gesell, in a brief order and accompanying memorandum, said that the statute under which Mr. Ehrlichman was charged and convicted—a federal law against lying to the FBI—was not properly invoked in this case.

In another court ruling today, one of the two perjury counts against California Lt. Gov. Ed Reinecke was dismissed by U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker.

But Judge Parker denied a defense motion to grant a judgment of acquittal on a second count as the defense began its case.

Ehrlichman was convicted 10 days ago on three counts of perjury—one of lying to the FBI and two of lying to a grand jury—and a count of violating the civil rights of Daniel Ellsberg's former psychiatrist, Dr. Lewis Fielding. The charge grew out of the break-in at Dr. Fielding's office in 1971.

The jury found Ehrlichman not guilty of a fourth perjury count.

The perjury count which Judge Gesell threw out carried a maximum penalty of five years in prison and a fine of $10,000.

Judge Gesell denied Ehrlichman's post-trial motions for acquittal or a new trial on the other counts on which he was convicted.

Judge Gesell also denied motions of Gordon Liddy, convicted Watergate burglar who also was found guilty of conspiracy in the Ellsberg case, for a directed motion of acquittal.

Sentencing is scheduled July 31. In his order today, Judge Gesell compared the circumstances of an FBI interview with sworn grand jury or court testimony where a verbatim record is taken.

An FBI agent talks to a person informally and makes a report of the interview based on his memory and the notes he took, Judge Gesell said.

"In short, the FBI interview may occur—as it did here—under extremely informal circumstances which do not sufficiently alert the person interviewed to the danger that false statements may lead to a felony conviction," he said.

Apart from that, the judge said, it was unfair that the penalties for lying to the FBI and the grand jury should be equally harsh.

In the Reinecke ruling, the count dismissed at the request of defense attorney James Cox alleged that Mr. Reinecke testified falsely to the Senate Judiciary Committee two years ago. He was accused of lying in saying that he had no way of knowing whether former U.S. Attorney General John Mitchell knew of a financial commitment by a subsidiary of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. to the 1972 Republican National Convention prior to July 31, 1971.

Kennedy Question
Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., a member of the Judiciary Committee, asked Mr. Reinecke about Mr. Mitchell's knowledge of the ITT pledge while the panel was considering the nomination of Richard Kleindienst to be attorney general.

"The question is put somewhat ambiguously," the judge said of Sen. Kennedy's question.

Mr. Cox had argued that Sen. Kennedy's question specifically called for an impression.

"It was vague and uncertain, and that question called for an impression," Mr. Cox argued.

The one remaining count against Mr. Reinecke accuses him of lying to the committee about when he first discussed the convention site with Mr. Mitchell.

Study Group Asks U.S. to Cut Inflow of Foreign Doctors

By Victor Cohn

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI).—A program to cut drastically the number of graduates of foreign medical schools now entering American medicine has been urged by an Association of American Medical Colleges task force.

Such graduates are becoming "a category of second-class physicians" and "products of unaccredited educational systems" who threaten the quality of American care, the task force charged.

Graduates of foreign schools, it pointed out, now compose nearly a fifth of all the nation's 358,000 doctors, and their ranks are swelling.

A third of all interns and residents in American hospitals and almost half of all doctors being licensed are such graduates.

Mostly Asians

They are mainly foreign born—70 per cent currently are from Asia, mostly the Philippines. But about 3 per cent of graduates of foreign schools now taking American screening examinations are U.S. citizens who were unable to get into crowded U.S. schools.

Between 56 per cent and 67 per cent of the foreign graduates, including those foreign and American-born, have been failing a standard U.S. screening examination in the last few years, the report said.

The U.S.-born, it added, suffer as equally poor if not greater failure rate than the foreign-born.

The task force view was that the flood of foreign medical graduates must be reduced "in the interest of the quality of medical education and care" in the United States.

List of Recommendations

The task force recommended that:

- A standard qualifying examination should be developed and given to graduates of U.S. and foreign schools alike before they are admitted to an internship or residency. The foreign graduates now take a special screening exam, but medical educators feel that it is not tough enough.
- The number of foreign medical graduates given internships or residencies should be limited and the total number of such jobs available each year should exceed only slightly the number of graduates each year from U.S. schools.
- A pilot project should be started—with preference given to U.S. citizens—to learn to give foreign medical graduates some U.S. undergraduate-level learning experiences to correct their "defects," and bring them to the level of competence generally reached by U.S. graduates.
- Measures should be taken to reduce the "large but unknown" number of foreign graduates now giving unsupervised medical care in state hospitals and many other institutions, although they have not qualified for state licenses.
- New methods should be developed to provide the patient services given in many hospitals by foreign-trained interns and residents.
- Adequate funding should be provided to enlarge student bodies in U.S. medical schools. But other health workers, too, must be trained to give much of the care that the foreign-trained interns and residents are giving.

Franco Seen Progressing Favorably

MADRID, July 22 (Reuters).—Doctors treating the Spanish chief of state Francisco Franco, 81, reported today that he was progressing favorably.

The doctors said in a bulletin that Gen. Franco was now eating normally and that his body functions were returning to normal.

The report was issued less than 16 hours after the seven doctors held an urgent meeting with specialists last night to decide whether to operate on the general, who was hospitalized nearly two weeks ago with a circulatory ailment.

Well informed sources said that their hurried consultation was caused by fears that a blood clot in Gen. Franco's leg might move up to the heart or brain.

The doctors' bulletin did not say that they had considered surgery nor did it give any details of how they were tackling the thrombophlebitis-inflammation of the walls of the veins and blood clotting.

Oral Feeding

The wording of today's bulletin implied that Gen. Franco previously had been receiving food other than by mouth when it reported that "oral feeding has been normalized."

Friday, Gen. Franco suffered a relapse and vomited blood. At that time, he handed over power temporarily to his designated successor as chief of state, Prince Juan Carlos de Borbon, 36.

According to unofficial medical sources, the doctors are now faced with a delicate choice. They have to thin down Gen. Franco's blood to minimize the risk of blood clots forming and blocking vital organs, while preventing any new internal bleeding.

The exact choice of medication and its administration has not been made public, but the doctors clearly were not envisaging a very rapid recovery, the sources said.

Gang War Seen Among Belfast Protestant Units

BELFAST, July 22 (UPI).—A Protestant man shot outside an Ulster Defense Association club early today may have been the victim of a gang war between rival Protestant groups, detectives said.

The man was seriously wounded by gunfire, firing from ambush, as he stepped from the building. He was the fourth UDA man ambushed since the group on Saturday denounced the extremist Protestant Volunteer Force.

In other violence today, a bomb blast injured three persons in the northern Belfast suburb of Lisburn. The bomb exploded outside a Roman Catholic family's home, security spokesmen said. Army troops fired at a gunman seen in the area shortly after the blast.

In Ballymena, 30 miles north of Belfast, a gunman in a cruising sedan sprayed a passing police car with machine-gun fire on a rural road, wounding two officers in the car, police said.

Foreign Worker Chief Quits French Cabinet

PARIS, July 22 (Reuters).—Andre Postel-Vinay, French secretary of state for immigrant workers, today became the first minister to resign from the cabinet of Prime Minister Jacques Chirac.

Mr. Postel-Vinay, 63, disagreed with the recent government decision to suspend immigration of foreign workers into France and thought he was being granted insufficient funds to run his post, informed sources said.

President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing appointed as his successor Paul Dijoud, 38, who was secretary of state in charge of the civil service in the last cabinet headed by Pierre Messmer.

Several Hundred in Vienna

Jews Stranded by Soviet Bar on Re-Entry

By John Morrison

VIENNA, July 22 (Reuters).—Hopes of returning to the Soviet Union seem to be fading for several hundred Jews who have been stranded in Vienna for as much as three years after leaving Israel disenfranchised.

Now Vienna city welfare authorities are pressing the Austrian government to clarify the refugees' status and allow them to settle here permanently.

Retracing the route by which they traveled to Israel, they have straggled back to Vienna seeking permission from the Soviet Consulate to return home.

Blind Alley

Faced with a firm refusal, the emigrants find themselves in a bureaucratic blind alley from which there seems to be no escape.

While Jews still in the Soviet Union are campaigning to leave by resorting to hunger strikes, protest telegrams and sit-in demonstrations, the Vienna group has tried the same tactics in order to return, but to little effect.

Now even Soviet interest in them or the purpose of anti-Israel propaganda seems to have faded away.

For nearly 100 of the refugees, life here means a crumbling tenement in the Malaplace, a shabby Vienna back street.

Anxious not to jeopardize any faint hopes of going back to the Soviet Union, they prefer not to say what they feel about the Kremlin's refusal to let them return.

"We just made a mistake and now we want to go home. We're not politicians," they say.

Their bitterness is mostly directed at Israel. Some feel betrayed and say they are victims of Zionists, who tricked them into emigrating to a land of capitalist exploitation.

Others take a more measured view and say they could not settle in Israel because of the climate, or for personal reasons.

Since August, 1971, when the first would-be returnees reached Vienna, only about 30 or 40 have been allowed back, out of several hundred who applied.

This year, according to a well-placed source, only one application has been granted. Soviet policy is thought to have hardened late last year, when newspaper articles in Moscow spelled out clearly that those who chose to emigrate and give up their Soviet citizenship could have no hope of returning.

Most observers think a change of heart by Moscow is unlikely. If the Kremlin were to guarantee emigrants the right to change their minds and return, the result would be a surge in applications to leave by Soviet Jews who are now hesitant about making a definitive decision.

The Jews say that 80 per cent of the Soviet immigrants in Israel would secretly like to go home, but Israeli officials dispute this and point out that of the 90,000 from all walks of life who have gone to Israel from the Soviet Union, the proportion of those who have wanted to return is small.

Austrian officials now admit that they no longer have an accurate record of how many Jews are in Vienna. Since the Austrian Consulate in Israel stopped issuing visas to the returnees about a year ago, many have taken advantage of lax border controls to come here illegally.

The Jews themselves say that their numbers have grown to more than 1,000. Vienna welfare authorities, who have most contact with the group, put the figure at between 300 and 400, including about 30 or 40 children.

They are allowed to seek work, although most have no documents at all now that their six-month Israeli travel documents have expired.

The Austrian government considers them to be Israeli citizens and allows them to stay here only while they wait for an answer from the Soviet Consulate to their visa applications.

But the policy is tolerant. Austrian officials say that while slim hopes remain of solving the problem with the Kremlin, the outlook is unpromising. Chancellor Bruno Kreisky raised the matter with Premier Alexei Kosygin last year, apparently without result.

Some of the returnees may eventually accept life here and about 30 have gone a second time to Israel. But for the majority who want to go back, especially those with families in the Soviet Union, the future looks bleaker than ever.

Makonnen Quits, Imru Appointed Ethiopia Leader

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia, July 22 (AP).—Emperor Haile Selassie appointed Michael Imru today as Ethiopia's Premier, replacing Endalkatchew Makonnen, the official Ethiopian news agency announced. No reason was given for Mr. Makonnen's resignation.

Mr. Imru, 44, is believed to be in Geneva with his family after leaving Addis Ababa almost two months ago.

He has been minister in charge of social and economic affairs since February on Mr. Makonnen's government, which came to power in February during army and civilian unrest that forced the resignation of Premier Aklilu Habte Wold's cabinet.

Before that, Mr. Imru, who was educated in England, was head of the Ethiopian Mission to the UN office at Geneva.

6 Hunger Strikers Ailing in Mexico

MEXICO CITY, July 22 (AP).—Six Americans were hospitalized as more than 100 foreigners continued a hunger strike at two jails to protest their treatment by Mexican authorities and their own governments, prison officials said yesterday.

Most of the prisoners, mainly young middle-class youths, admit transporting drugs, which they said they were trying to import into the United States from South America.

Nine other Americans, including five women, were unable to get out of bed because they were so weak, some of their fellow prisoners said.

The inmates charge that they were tortured by the Mexicans and neglected by representatives of their own countries.

Leftist Convention Is Opened in Dublin

DUBLIN, July 22 (Reuters).—A convention of more than 100 young leftists from 15 nations opened here today with Irish republicans attacking British military and economic policy in Ireland.

The gathering, described as anti-imperialist and revolutionary, was organized by Sinn Fein, the legal political arm of the banned Irish Republican Army. The Irish government expressed disapproval, but no moves were made to ban the convention. Many girls were among the students and trade unionists at the convention.

After Evacuation From Cyprus

Refugees Talk of Rape, Looting and Killings

LONDON, July 22 (Reuters).—Exhausted travelers airlifted from Cyprus arrived in Britain today with allegations of looting, rape and indiscriminate killing on the island.

Two VC-10 aircraft brought 360 persons to the Royal Air Force Base at Fairford, in the west of England, as part of the RAF's evacuation of tourists caught up in the weekend invasion of Cyprus by Turkey.

It was reported in Cyprus today that about 250 Americans, who had taken refuge at the British base in Dhokkella, were airlifted by U.S. Navy helicopters to the island's a single VC-10 aircraft earlier lying offshore.

In Stockholm, the Foreign Ministry said that Swedish troops of the UN contingent on Cyprus had started evacuating about 600 Scandinavian tourists from Famagusta to the British base at Dhokkella.

The commander of British forces on Cyprus announced today that four British warships and a tanker will sail to the northern Cyprus coast early tomorrow to try to rescue hundreds of British and other nationals stranded at Kyrenia since Saturday.

Although most of the 260 persons evacuated to England were British, some of them were Austrians, Canadians, Frenchmen and Germans.

Several leveled looting and brutality charges against Cyprus's Greek-officer National Guard.

A newlywed Turkish Cypriot couple, Mehmet and Ayşe Basim, who live in London and were honeymooning in Limassol, said that they had seen the bodies of women and children in the streets and alleged that members of the National Guard had plundered all the houses in the Turkish quarter. Some of the houses had been set on fire, they said.

Mr. Basim, 28, a civil servant, said: "Greek (Cypriot) guards were shooting indiscriminately. They didn't seem to care who they hit."

Another evacuee, Keshan Derwish, 15, sobbed as he described the killing of her uncle and the wounding of his family by mortar fire which hit a house where the National Guard was holding them captive.

Through an interpreter, the girl said that she saw a woman raped by National Guard soldiers in the house yesterday and then shot in the head.

A British serviceman's wife, who declined to be identified, accused National Guard members of looting the homes of British military families as they left for safety.

But when the Turks invaded the Greek Cypriots immediately took up arms, Mr. Piper said. "We asked our friend why he was fighting, since he hated the new government, and he said, 'Now we are fighting the Turks.'"

It was reported in Cyprus today that about 250 Americans, who had taken refuge at the British base in Dhokkella, were airlifted by U.S. Navy helicopters to the island's a single VC-10 aircraft earlier lying offshore.

In Stockholm, the Foreign Ministry said that Swedish troops of the UN contingent on Cyprus had started evacuating about 600 Scandinavian tourists from Famagusta to the British base at Dhokkella.

The commander of British forces on Cyprus announced today that four British warships and a tanker will sail to the northern Cyprus coast early tomorrow to try to rescue hundreds of British and other nationals stranded at Kyrenia since Saturday.

Although most of the 260 persons evacuated to England were British, some of them were Austrians, Canadians, Frenchmen and Germans.

Several leveled looting and brutality charges against Cyprus's Greek-officer National Guard.

A newlywed Turkish Cypriot couple, Mehmet and Ayşe Basim, who live in London and were honeymooning in Limassol, said that they had seen the bodies of women and children in the streets and alleged that members of the National Guard had plundered all the houses in the Turkish quarter. Some of the houses had been set on fire, they said.

Mr. Basim, 28, a civil servant, said: "Greek (Cypriot) guards were shooting indiscriminately. They didn't seem to care who they hit."

Another evacuee, Keshan Derwish, 15, sobbed as he described the killing of her uncle and the wounding of his family by mortar fire which hit a house where the National Guard was holding them captive.

Through an interpreter, the girl said that she saw a woman raped by National Guard soldiers in the house yesterday and then shot in the head.

A British serviceman's wife, who declined to be identified, accused National Guard members of looting the homes of British military families as they left for safety.

Yesterday morning, large king, an American on vacation, was sitting in the lobby of the Nicosia Hotel as mortar rounds shooed building.

"I thought it was the end of my life," she said as she crawled around the floor of Officers' Club. "I made a mind I wouldn't panic. I said to myself, 'That's it, I'm my share, it's over.'"

Fragile Truce Takes Effect In Cyprus, 3-Party Talks

It is clear that the degree of compliance will depend on Athens and Ankara and how effectively they can restrain their Cypriot nationals.

Turkish and Greek forces were engaged in fighting for the Nicosia airport early today and other heavy fighting was reported in the Kyrenia area, in the north, and around Larnaca on the southern coast, according to witnesses.

British officials said that about 4,000 Turkish Cypriots had taken refuge at a British military base in Akrotiri, on the southernmost tip of the island.

According to United Nations sources, Greek last night flew in troop reinforcements and material to Cyprus and they managed to land at Nicosia airport. This morning the Turks also brought in fresh troops and armor.

Greek Cypriot anti-aircraft batteries today shot down five more heavy bombers flying over Nicosia, the island's capital. This brought the total that the Greek Cypriots claim to have shot down since the Turkish invasion started Saturday to 19.

A Ministry of Agriculture statement broadcast by Nicosia radio reported a "huge" fire in the Paphos forests caused by Turkish bombing yesterday. The fire is threatening to destroy the Paphos forest, the statement said.

The Ministry of Commerce announced during the broadcast that any merchant who increases the prices of goods will be "punished severely."

Spreading False News

A military commandment broadcast by Nicosia radio warned citizens against spreading "false news about the military situation."

The commandment said that anyone violating this order would be "arrested immediately and regarded as traitor and collaborator with the Turks and punished severely."

An Australian newspaper, Bryan Bowtell, reported that thousands of heavily armed Turkish troops were pouring into the Turkish quarter of Nicosia, relieving the Turkish Cypriot militiamen who have defended the area since the fighting started three days ago.

epublicans Replace Counsel n Impeachment Committee

By R.W. Apple Jr.

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI)—Albert Jenner Jr., who has advised the impeachment of President Nixon, has been replaced as counsel to the House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Jenner, a 57-year-old lawyer from Chicago, will continue to advise the committee and may retain his title. But the functions of the committee will be carried out by Sam Garrison, the chief minority counsel, who is on the Capitol Hill staff of the House.

Mr. Jenner will be replaced by Rep. Charles Wiggins, a Republican from California, who is the ranking member of the committee. Mr. Wiggins said that he was looking for advice on the committee's actions.

As Impeachment Vote Nears

GOP Congressmen Showered With Favors by White House

By Lou Cannon

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI)—Rep. William Cohen, R-Maine, was invited for a cruise aboard the presidential yacht Sequoia, that subsequently was canceled; fellow Republican Rep. Tom Ralback of Illinois said it was just as well.

"It probably would have been the first time," Rep. Ralback observed, "that they would have taken the Sequoia into shark-infested waters." Rep. Cohen is a critic of President Nixon and a member of the House Judiciary Committee.

Rep. Ralback's quip reflects the growing recognition among Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee of the mounting political pressure brought against Republican congressmen contemplating voting for the impeachment of President Nixon.

"The White House has taken a count and they know they've lost the committee," a Republican member said last week. "Their only hope is to keep the vote down and try to pull it out in the House."

Few Republicans now appear to believe that Mr. Nixon can avoid an impeachment trial in the Senate.

The second-ranking committee Republican, Robert McClory of Illinois, was merely saying out loud what his fellow colleagues have been saying privately when he predicted last week that impeachment articles would attract four or five Republican votes on the committee. If the Democrats stick together, this would mean a nearly 2-to-1 vote for impeachment.

Rep. McClory went on to say that he believed the House would

350 Demonstrate

On Capitol Steps

To Support Nixon

WASHINGTON, July 22 (AP)—About 350 supporters of President Nixon gathered in the Capitol today to begin what they said would be a 72-hour fast and prayer session.

Standing beneath American flags and signs saying "God Bless President Nixon," the crowd heard speeches denouncing the impeachment proceedings as no solution to the "Watergate morality."

Rabbi Baruch Korff, chairman of the Citizens Committee for Fairness to the President, briefly addressed the rally, saying the group was emulating the "founding fathers who, 150 years ago, declared a day of prayer, a day of fasting."

In a press conference before the demonstration, Rabbi Korff said Mr. Nixon has not done anything not done by other presidents.

Mr. Nixon, Rabbi Korff said, is being attacked by "vindictive partisan men building their own careers on the ashes of other men."

A Transcontinental Love Affair

Founders in Depths of New York

NEW YORK, July 22 (UPI)—A twice-widowed great-grandmother, in New York City in search of a suitor who wooed her on a bus tour a month ago, planned to go home to Kalamazoo, Mich., today—alone.

Lena Clark, 68, arrived in New York last Friday to try to find George Brown, a widower of 71 who proposed to her last month after an afternoon sightseeing tour of Hollywood.

"He said I was the right one for him," Mrs. Clark said. At the time, however, she didn't share his feelings, and said no. But later she had second thoughts, and came to New York to accept the offer of matrimony.

Unfortunately, however, despite extensive publicity and help from city police, Mrs. Clark was unable to locate Mr. Brown, and decided to go home because she's running out of money.

Her first husband died 30 years ago, and her second husband, whom she also met during a bus trip, died last year.

Ex-Sen. Wayne Morse, 73, Vietnam War Critic

PORTLAND, Ore., July 22 (AP)—Former Sen. Wayne Morse, 73, one of the first members of Congress to speak out against U.S. involvement in Vietnam, died today.

Death ended his second attempt at a political comeback since losing his Oregon Senate seat in 1968.

Hospital officials said Mr. Morse had been suffering from a urinary tract infection. They said he died of kidney and heart failure.

Mr. Morse was defeated in 1968 by Republican Sen. Bob Packwood by a narrow margin. Four years later, Mr. Morse, then 71, was beaten handsily in a race against Sen. Mark Hatfield.

Two months ago, Mr. Morse again won the Democratic senatorial nomination—and the right to challenge Sen. Packwood—by defeating state Senate President Jason Bos, 44, in Oregon's primary election.

Tonkin Gulf Vote

Mr. Morse, known for unwillingness to compromise on issues, started opposing U.S. involvement in Vietnam, early in the 1960s.

He and former Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, who died last month at the age of 87, were the only two senators who voted against the Tonkin Gulf Resolution in 1964. President Johnson used the resolution as the equivalent of a declaration of war in Southeast Asia.

Mr. Morse's age was a major campaign issue during the May primary, but he countered by saying that many great U.S. senators had performed their best services after they were 70 years old.

But, he added, "I think everybody realizes that it isn't to be expected that I would run for re-election in a contest."

Being a one-term senator would not be a liability for Oregon, said Mr. Morse, who already had served 24 years in the Senate.

Mr. Morse, once a Republican, switched to Independent in 1953 when he and party leaders agreed that he was too liberal for the GOP. Three years later, he became a Democrat and was re-elected in 1956.

Despite differences with President Kennedy and John F. Johnson, he was floor manager for a number of administration bills in education and Latin American affairs. He was a delegate to the United Nations General Assembly in 1960 and represented the United States in numerous international conferences.

'Very Unique Mold'

In Washington, Mr. Morse's death was announced to the Senate by Sen. Hatfield with the comment, "He was a politician from a very unique mold. Sen. Morse's early prophecies and warnings about Vietnam were such that we all owe him a great debt."

The Democratic leader, Mike Mansfield of Montana, remembered Mr. Morse as "a man of fierce independence."

Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., praised Mr. Morse's "remarkable intelligence... and rocklike integrity." He said the Oregonian was partially responsible for many of the improvements in U.S. education during the last 30 years.

In 1944, when Mr. Morse first ran for the Senate, his campaign slogan was "principles above politics." Three decades later, the slogan was basically the same: "I shall work and fight for the restoration of integrity in our own government."

Sea of Farmer

The son of a Wisconsin farmer, Mr. Morse earned BA and MA degrees from the University of Wisconsin, a law degree from the University of Minnesota, and a doctor of jurisprudence at Columbia University.

In 1924, he married Mildred Downie of Madison, Wis., whom he had known since his grade school days and always called "Midge." She was a home economics teacher.

Mr. Morse taught at the Universities of Wisconsin and Minnesota and Columbia, University in New York, then moved to Oregon in 1928 and became dean of the University of Oregon Law School at the age of 31.

His lifelong hobby was raising and showing horses. He raised horses and cattle on a farm in Montgomery County, Maryland, while serving in the Senate and lived on a ranch near Eugene, Ore., until his death.

ZURICH, July 22 (UPI)—Herman C. Honneger, 84, a nominee for the Nobel Prize for Peace in 1950, died July 9 at his home here.

Mr. Honneger, who also had a home in Newtown, Conn., was educated in Switzerland and in 1922, emigrated to the United States.

He founded the Pestalozzi Children's Village Trust and the Pestalozzi Foundation of America.

Cease-Fire in Cyprus

It was a short war. At least, one is entitled to hope so, although cease-fires can be delicate bulwarks against bloodshed, especially under conditions as complex as those prevailing in Cyprus. The efforts of the United States and Great Britain to end the fighting were intense. The Soviet Union at least held hands off, and the worst that can be said about the powers in this struggle is that they failed to prevent an explosion of wrath which must have continuing consequences.

If the cease-fire holds, the most urgent need of diplomacy is to seek to insure that Cyprus does not again become a center of world crisis and peril. And that, in the light of some 20 years of tension, as well as the conflicting aspirations of Greeks and Turks on mainland and island, will not be easy.

The mainland Greeks and many of the Greek Cypriots want union with Greece. The Turks—in Ankara, certainly, and many in Cyprus, probably—want partition, with Greece and Turkey each taking part of the island. Enosis (union with Greece) of all Cyprus is anathema to Turkey, and even if Athens were to concede the kind of "double Enosis" Turkey wants, it would probably be a political and economic monstrosity, of the kind that has plagued so many lands which sought to reconcile ethnicism with a stubborn geography.

A return to an independent Cyprus seems to be the best guarantee of a reasonable degree of peace on the island. But it will obviously not be independence under the National Guard.

Probably some kind of internationally supervised plebiscite, with more effective international support for the results than the Makarios government received, would be the best answer, in theory, at least.

Good theories of government often suffer at the hands of the people who are governed, especially when, as in Cyprus, there is a long background of communal rivalry, and many nations whose conflicting interests focus on the island. Moreover, there has been enough war there to bring sorrow, loss, and anger to many, while the anguish has not been prolonged sufficiently to convince any side of its waste and uselessness.

But then, one has only to look to Indochina, to Ireland and the Middle East to realize that some wars may never convince committed participants of their folly. It seems the role of wisdom is to press for the good theory as opposed to solutions that would enhance bitterness and place a premium on war or terror. Sometimes reason does prevail in human affairs, sometimes it can become a way of life, a viable compromise which is generally acceptable. That is the only hope for Cyprus—as for so many other parts of the world where rabid emotions find vent in violence, under the cloak of high idealism.

A Vote of Conscience

As the members of the House Judiciary Committee prepare to vote on the critical issue of impeachment, they have a responsibility to lay aside all other considerations except the claims of conscience. Other than a vote to declare war, this is the most important vote any of them will ever cast.

The atmosphere is inevitably charged with political electricity. Some pressure groups and some constituents are going to be disappointed no matter how a member decides to vote.

Since President Nixon is a Republican, the pressures are inevitably more intense for Republican congressmen and for those conservative Democrats from the South where the President's political strength is greatest. It is difficult to break with a President of one's own party. It is easier and more comfortable to stick with one's friends than to take the unpopular course.

But simply because the Republican party itself is divided and there are pressures both for and against impeachment, a congressman cannot make up his mind by trying to guess the mood of the constituency. As Rep. Robert McClory, R-Ill., observed the other day, he and his fellow members will have to be able to explain and defend their votes regardless of which position they take. For that reason if no other, it should be the position they genuinely believe in and can defend with conviction.

Liberal Democrats, however, are not exempt from the responsibility to act disinterestedly even though a pro-impeachment vote probably would be politically safe for most of them. Their duty, too, is to look at the evidence and to transcend partisanship.

In reality, it is not unduly optimistic to believe that members of the committee and their fellow citizens back home are considering the grave issue of impeachment on its merits. In times of crisis, Americans have shown that they can rise above their private concerns and prejudices and put the interests of their country first. They expect their representatives to study the facts and use their best judgment.

Responsive to that trust, most members of both parties can be counted upon to cast a vote for their country, a vote unaffected by selfish interest or partisan feeling—a vote of conscience.

Recession or Spasm?

The administration's ability to squeeze good news out of the latest data on the performance of the national economy is an illusionary feat worthy of Houdini.

Real gross national product—total output of goods and services, corrected for inflation—declined at an annual rate of 1.3 per cent in the April-June quarter of this year. Having plummeted by 7 per cent in the January-March quarter, a bigger drop than had been announced earlier, real GNP has now declined by more than 8 per cent.

At the same time, inflation continues to boil. The overall price index that is used to "deflate" GNP rose at an annual rate of 8.8 per cent in the second quarter, following a 12.3 per cent rate of increase in the first quarter, also worse than previously reported.

Nevertheless, administration spokesmen insist, the economy is looking better. Real output declined much less in the second than in the first quarter, and the overall price index rose less rapidly. Industrial production dropped less than in earlier recessions, nor has unemployment increased as much. Total employment actually advanced. In fact, said Secretary of Commerce Dent, there is no recession at all, despite the two successive quarters of decline in real GNP, but only an "energy-related spasm."

There is no point in playing semantic games over whether the economy is or is not technically in something called a "recession," a term which the private but quasi-official scorekeeper, the National Bureau of Research, has never been willing to define in a way that would let anybody but itself keep score. What matters is that the American economy is in a weakened condition resulting from more than the rise in oil prices.

Inflation, now intensified by an acceleration of wage increases, shows little evidence of slowing down. Consumer prices rose at an annual rate of 12 per cent in June; the annual rate of increase in the consumer price index for the first half of 1974 has been 12.6 per cent. Wholesale prices have climbed at the astonishing annual rate of 18.3 per cent in the first six months of this year.

In evaluating the administration's present blithe view of the price outlook, one might look back at the 1973 economic report of the President, in which Mr. Nixon proclaimed the goal of "getting the rate of inflation down to 2 1/2 per cent or less by the end of 1973."

Once again, this year, the President has made a bold proclamation: There will be no recession, he has said, as though that declaration were itself a policy or a program.

At best, the economy appears headed for very sluggish growth in the months ahead. Demand is weak; GNP would already have fallen still further had it not been for a huge involuntary accumulation of inventories. Housing is in a deep recession. Money rates are astronomically high. The securities markets are depressed.

White House cheerleading is a pitiful substitute for genuine national economic policymaking and leadership.

International Opinion

Europe and Cyprus

The damage caused by the open conflict between Greeks and Turks over Cyprus is considerable and its complete repair will undoubtedly take a long time. In both countries nationalistic emotions have been aroused, and it has been demonstrated that even common membership of NATO is not of itself sufficient to banish the specter of military confrontation. The primary need now is for restraint on the part of the Turks, not only in regard to their military actions on the island itself, but also with respect to their demands. Should Ankara seek to effect a displacement of equilibrium in its own favor (and perhaps derive advantage in the dispute over Aegean oil), it could well prove difficult to defuse the situation.

WASHINGTON—Count Vint, the Italian chargé d'affaires, called at the State Department concerning the lynching of five Italians at Tallulah, La., on Thursday night. It is said that Dr. Hodges shot a goat belonging to the Italians.

PARIS—Yesterday was Russian Day at the American Passport Bureau but the French police were even busier than the American consuls. 'The Manifest Injury'

By Anthony Lewis

NEW YORK—An admirer of President Nixon, sickened by Watergate but still opposed to impeachment, explained the other day: "Why bother impeaching him? He has been punished enough by what has happened, and that will be an example to future presidents. It is better to stop now."

If the person of Richard Nixon were the issue, that argument would be persuasive. There is no great purpose in merely pursuing him into further disgrace. History will record him for what he is.

But the issue that faces Congress is not Nixon. The process that finally reaches the stage of judgment in the House Judiciary Committee this week will decide what kind of government Americans are going to have, two centuries after winning independence. It will decide what kind of country we are.

Awesome List

That large sense of what is at stake is irresistibly conveyed in the Articles of Impeachment proposed by the committee counsel, John Doar, and the supporting findings. Even after all the disclosures of the last two years, the list of things done by this President and his men is awesome.

Obstruction of justice, subornation of perjury, burglary, interference with the judicial process, illegal wiretapping for political ends, destruction of evidence, use of the tax system to punish enemies, misuse of police and intelligence agencies, tax fraud, contempt of Congress: "Those are some of the wrongs committed—all, as the draft resolution says, 'to the manifest injury of the confidence of the nation and the great prejudice of the cause of law and justice.'"

That those things happened is not really in doubt. The question is what Congress should do about them—do to prevent them happening again. Some congressional Republicans, reluctant to impeach, are evidently trying to convince themselves that there is some method short of impeachment. Rep. David W. Dennis, R-Ind., said, "We really ought to be thinking about some remedial legislation."

But the remedy already exists. It was written into the Constitution. Failure to use it now would necessarily appear to a degree as a condoning of what has happened. If a future president were lawless, would he be put off by the history of a predecessor who survived disclosure of such wrongdoing? Or would he be tempted to think that he could be more effective in the abuse of power?

Deterrence

In maintaining law and order in society, deterrence is a crucial factor. The potential criminal is most effectively deterred by the sense that punishment is likely to be swift and sure. It would not be much of a deterrent if judge or jury refused to enforce existing laws and suggested that others be passed.

But Nixon's final argument is that impeachment would weaken the presidency—would leave future presidents "afraid to make unpopular decisions," as he put it. But the articles proposed to the House Judiciary Committee by its counsel deal not with Nixon's policy decisions but with his illegal methods and abuses of trust. The institution of the presidency would hardly be weakened by cleansing it of the corruptions that have sapped public confidence.

It is not just the character of the presidency that these next weeks will define. It is our own character as a people: our values, our sense of legitimacy, our trust. Will that special American reverence for the law survive? Will our wounded respect for institutions be revived, or will we become an altogether cynical people? Will we believe again in the possibility of leadership—believe that America's constitutional system can work?

Responsibility

Those are some of the larger questions that may be profoundly affected by the course of impeachment. Underlying them all is the idea of moral responsibility. "I will not place the blame on subordinates," the President said in his Watergate speech of April 30, 1973. "The man at the top must bear the responsibility."

Yet now the man whose personal and political staff was rife with criminality, the man in whose name this country's most pervasive political crimes were committed, says that somehow it had nothing to do with him. Is that to be our standard of responsibility?

Standards are the issue in the end—legal and moral, national and personal. As the House Judiciary Committee heard John Doar last week, a Nixon supporter waiting outside said: "We elected him President and he has the right to use his judgment on what he should break into." Congress will decide whether that is the kind of country America is to be.

Other Anglo-French Summits

By James Goldsborough

PARIS—When Prime Minister Harold Wilson came here last week to tell the French whether Britain intended to stay in the European Economic Community or not, one couldn't help recalling visits of past British prime ministers to Paris.

Two of the best remembered visits are those Harold Macmillan made in 1963 shortly before Gen. de Gaulle shocked the world at de Gaulle's press conference by unilaterally vetoing British membership in the community without consulting anyone.

The British and French versions of those two crucial de Gaulle-Macmillan meetings at Chateau de Champs and Rambouillet subsequently differed, as might be expected, and it was left for Konrad Adenauer in the last volume of his "Erinnerungen" to shed some light on what De Gaulle told him about the veto of Britain.

Adenauer wrote copiously on his 1963-1968 meetings with De Gaulle for those were the heady days of Franco-German rapprochement and the signing of the friendship treaty that was later to fade, as De Gaulle would say, as quickly as young girls and roses. But while Adenauer was in power harmony prevailed on the Rhine, and the discussions were very open.

Fears

One thing Adenauer makes completely clear: Neither he nor De Gaulle thought Britain was ready for Europe. Both feared the British would destroy what they were building, and transform the community into some vast, diluted trading block stretching out as far as America and the Commonwealth.

"It is the old English spiel with the Continent," Adenauer wrote, "divide et impera." That, however, was not the message that Macmillan brought to De Gaulle in the two fateful 1963 meetings. According to the British sources, Macmillan pledged Britain to Europe during both these meetings, hinting at Franco-British nuclear cooperation and telling De Gaulle at Rambouillet that Britain wanted to join Europe not only for commercial reasons but for political ones.

The Rambouillet meeting in December was only days before Macmillan flew off to Nassau to meet President Kennedy and sign the Nassau agreement that De Gaulle was to use as a pretext for his veto the following month. But it was only a pretext. De Gaulle already had told Macmillan at Rambouillet before the Nassau agreement that Britain was not ready for Europe.

Adenauer tells in his memoirs that at one point Macmillan told De Gaulle forlornly that he (Macmillan) wanted to build the Europe of Gauller, while De Gaulle wanted only the Europe of Charlemagne.

From London:

The lesson is the one Napoleon summed up in a memorable way: 'One can do anything with a bayonet except sit on it.'

LONDON—My theme today is not the rights and wrongs of the actions and attitudes of Cyprus, Greek and Turk; these are more important, certainly, but more significant, and indeed startling, is the reaction in Britain to the coup and the ensuing crisis.

Once again, it is the story of Sherlock Holmes and the "curious incident of the dog in the night-time." "But," said the faithful Watson, "the dog did nothing in the night-time." "That," replied Holmes, "was the curious incident." And the curious incident of the night of the British in this time of crisis is that the British has done nothing but urge restraint, and what is more almost nobody here has wished it otherwise.

No Call

When the Daily Express, still by far our most imperially minded newspaper, unequivocally declares that, whatever our views of what has happened in Cyprus, it is nothing to do with Britain, and that Britain should not even contemplate intervention, something has happened to Britain, for less than a dozen years ago there would have been a violently different reaction.

Nowhere the entire range of serious politicians has there been a call for Britain to take military action. Mediation, yes—Britain, after all, is one of the guarantors of the Cyprus independence settlement—but intervention, no. And yet Cyprus is a member of the Commonwealth (and a loyal one, too), and despite this the government is being urged from all sides to refrain from committing so much as a single soldier to battle. Have we really learned the lesson of history at last? If so, it is not before time.

The lesson is the one which Napoleon summed up in a memorable way: "One can do anything with a bayonet except sit on it." It is only 18 years—an eye-blink in the life of nations—since Britain denied that truth at Suez, and with French and Israeli collusion, launched an invasion of Egypt. It is even less time since Gen. Menem Williams caused uproar and fury in Britain by remarking that "Africa is for the Africans." It is much the same period of time since the late Dean Acheson—then whom Britain has had few truer friends—was savagely attacked in Britain for saying, kindly and with perfect truth, that "Britain has lost an empire and not yet found a role." It is very much less time still since the common speech of reason of Anglia. But at last, it seems, Britain has done what Sencho Panza pointed out one must learn to do: one can scratch. The final, undelivered shame of it was defined in that same Daily Express editorial: it pointed out that, even if Britain were to intervene in Cyprus, it didn't the troops to do it.

Britain has long been prisoner of its history. The Elizabethan age set the to efforts belief in Britain's innate superiority; the build empire, culminating in the share of the "grab for Africa" in the 19th century, provided attitude that Britain has a responsibility throughout world. And Britain's head with the Industrial Revolution laid the foundations for its era belief that if the world ed anything done, made it would have to come to B and ask policy. Is it wonder that De Gaulle, a foreigner, was enraged b all measure by Britain's cla a "special relationship" w United States? All it did remind him that Britain was proceeding on the assurance of a special relationship God.

Is It Over?

Can it really be over? something which has last long, and been productive much good and so much really have come to an end course. Like all the ebbs and of history, there is no one ment at which such things pen. No bell rings to signal end of one era and the begin of another. Educational Tool in Care of Dying

Physician's Views as He Died Are Portrayed on Videotapes

By Lawrence K. Altman

SEATTLE, July 22 (UPI)—Gary Leinbach, a 50-year-old physician and agnostic who had fought both medical and religious solace while struggling to survive a painful cancer, is posthumously communicating, through videotapes, some information about how he chose to die.

Jordan Asks Talks With Palestinians

BEIRUT, July 22 (UPI)—Jordan's foreign ministers of Jordan, Egypt and Syria and a representative of the Palestine Liberation Organization met today to discuss the Arab stand on Middle East peace negotiations.

A statement issued by Premier Rifaat said that Jordan would be the meeting "as soon as possible." He said that his government had sent invitations to the parties concerned and was waiting a reply.

Cunard Reports Liner Safe From Arab Sub Attack

LONDON, July 22 (Reuters)—Trident security precautions for the Queen Elizabeth 2 since it made its virtually impossible for a submarine to track the vessel, the chairman of the liner's owners, Cunard, said in a letter to the Times today.

Israel to Insist in Secret Talks

TEL AVIV, July 22 (UPI)—Former Yitzhak Rabin said today that Israel insisted on secret talks at the Geneva conference solely with Arab governments and again rejected independent Palestinian statehood.

ed by a disease that he had become a specialist in treating. In his practice and in teaching at the University of Washington here, he had diagnosed bowel diseases like the cancer that afflicted him. The cancer sapped his strength, yet he struggled to live every day possible to be home with his wife and two growing children.

The University of Washington carried the process a step beyond videotaping Dr. Leinbach's expression of his feelings while dying. Also included were his wife and brother, and the teams of doctors who cared for his pains and needs, and the clergy who tried to help the agnostic make a spiritual peace.

Another message conveyed by the videotapes of the doctors and clergy is that a large communications gap exists between each of these professional groups and the dying patients they serve.

To a large extent, the tapes reflect the unprecedented amount of attention Americans are devoting to death. In books and lectures, many people are advocating euthanasia; they say that doctors often go too far in treating patients with incurable conditions.

In these discussions, less attention is given to those who, like Dr. Leinbach, seek second medical opinions and demand an active role in decisions affecting their own care. Such patients reject certain standard therapies and jump at experimental techniques as they shop among medical centers in hopes of living longer.

Yet this characteristic of trying to survive at all costs is a basic human instinct. Now this instinct is often being discussed in the context of consumer rights, a phrase more generally used in debates over the quality of manufactured goods.

The videotapes are not a philosophical discourse. They are full of human touches. Mrs. Leinbach's description of their daughter's saying "goodbye" instead of her customary "good night" when she saw her father last hours before his death, have deeply moved many of the hundreds of professionals who have seen the videotapes.

As compassionate a physician as Dr. Leinbach was, he could not get himself to write letters that his 5-year-old daughter, Michelle, and 12-year-old son, Robert, might read later as teenagers, his widow said in an interview.

After Dr. Leinbach's death, four of his doctors were videotaped as a group in one session and four of the clergy whose counsel Dr. Leinbach had sought were videotaped in another session. Mrs. Leinbach's interviews continued more than a year after her husband's death.

Saigon Reports 200 Missing In Ambush South of Danang

SAIGON, July 22 (AP)—More than 200 government reinforcements were reported missing today after North Vietnamese forces ambushed and seized a 37-truck military convoy in the fourth day of fighting along the northern coast below Danang, military sources said.

The fate of the government reinforcements was not immediately known. It was not clear how many were killed, wounded and captured or how many might have escaped.

It was the second ambush of a government convoy carrying reinforcements to Duc Duc in the last three days. A convoy ambushed Friday escaped with only light damage and casualties.

The fighting had broken out earlier Friday when a North Vietnamese regiment, numbering about 2,000 troops, seized six government villages with a total population of 10,000 and overran two outposts in the area, field reports said.

Meanwhile, the Viet Cong said they wiped out a ranger battalion and seized all its weapons, including two 150-mm artillery pieces. They said they destroyed 24 military vehicles and shot down a helicopter. A government battalion numbers about 400 men.

The fighting is the heaviest in the region below Danang since the cease-fire went into effect 18 months ago.

Col. Le Trung Hien, chief spokesman for the command, said it is a continuation of a Communist offensive. Col. Hien said a current Communist terror campaign in the region south of Danang is also part of the offensive.

More than 500 South Vietnamese troops have been reported killed, wounded or missing in the fighting below Danang in the last four days. Heavy civilian casualties also were reported.

column. Thirty government soldiers were reported wounded. More than 20 armored vehicles and a 400-man battalion were reported moving from Phnom Penh to beef up government troops on Highway 4—once Phnom Penh's supply link with the coast.

Visitors to the front said government artillery batteries fired more than 1,000 rounds at rebel forces positioned in the jungle on the flanks of the highway.

Laos Coalition Is Functioning Despite Souvanna's Illness

VIENTIANE, Laos, July 22 (UPI)—One week after Premier Souvanna Phouma's disabling heart attack, the two groups in the 5 1/2-month-old coalition regime are ironing out a way to continue without the unifying influence of the government leader.

The indications, after a week without Premier Souvanna, are positive. Although the heart attack put the coalition's work at a near standstill, it did not bring on a serious crisis of leadership.

There is no formal agreement, but it appears that the two deputy premiers—one a Pathet Lao and one from the Vientiane faction—will assume Prince Souvanna's duties jointly.

"Dismay" is the word diplomats here most commonly use to describe the two sides' reaction to the news of Premier Souvanna's illness. Many think that the Pathet Lao were even more disappointed than Vientiane.

The leftists have emerged as the dominant half of the coalition and they are believed to have counted on Prince Souvanna's presence for several more years in their plans to become Laos's dominant political force through peaceful means.

The Short Life of a Vietnamese: Draft-Dodger to Dead Hero

By Philip A. McCombs

SAIGON, July 22 (UPI)—The artillery shell blew off half his face, but he lived four hours more before dying. And yesterday they buried Vo Phuc Huynh, 24, private first class in the Marine Corps of the Republic of Vietnam. PFC Huynh had granted a series of private interviews over the years to The Washington Post. It was one way that the correspondents here kept in touch with the human dimension of the war.

Pvt. Huynh told how for years he shamelessly avoided the draft, then began a series of desertions and jail escapes that kept him alive. He and his family paid half a dozen bribes. Pvt. Huynh was not a political person—that was one of the points of his story.

Despite his bad record, he had fought bravely at times and, at his funeral, his country could even be proud of him.

A medal was attached to his coffin. "On God," wailed his mother, a small woman dressed like Pvt. Huynh's other relatives, in white rags. "Now he's dead, I don't need the medal. If they pin gold on it, I don't want it."

His father's cries reverberated through the family's small suburban home on the outskirts of Saigon as the coffin was lifted by pallbearers.

"If the war goes on like this," the old man said, "all the sons will have to go. They will all be killed. Look, we have lost Huynh and now we worry about the next generation."

"Peace must come, and both sides will have to give some. The government will have to give more than the Communists."

Pvt. Huynh's plain wood coffin was draped with the South Vietnamese flag—"yellow for the yellow of our skin, with three red stripes for the red of our blood." The coffin was placed in a black truck.

Seven Vietnamese Marines, armed with loaded M-16 rifles, walked beside the truck, their weapons pointed toward the sides of the road.

The family walked in front—Pvt. Huynh's 31-year-old wife, his 3-year-old son, his sisters and brothers, aunts and uncles. Pvt. Huynh's parents could not go to the cemetery because of a peculiar combination of dates and times that meant it would be bad luck to do so.

The Post's last story about Pvt. Huynh appeared early in 1973, about the time of the Vietnam cease-fire. It was about a letter that he wrote to his sister, a vivid account of life in the combat that he had long sought to avoid, the terrible fear of his first real battle, the exhilaration of survival.

At that time, and until his death, he seemed somewhat changed from his early days of complete rebellion. He was no longer deserting his unit, and seemed at least somewhat resigned to what every South Vietnamese youth must face: an indefinite period of military service.

At the time he was killed, Pvt. Huynh's father was negotiating a deal with military authorities to have his son transferred to a safe job in the Saigon area.

The deal seemed almost completed and, during his home leave a month ago, Pvt. Huynh told his parents he should have his transfer orders by July 19.

"He came home on July 19, alright," his sister said. "He was dead."

The deal to get Pvt. Huynh to Saigon involved paying a bribe of about $100 to one of his commanders.

The family now thinks that something went wrong because someone down the line did not get his cut, and sent Pvt. Huynh to a dangerous forward outpost as a reprisal.

Paying bribes to stay alive in Vietnam is part of living, and the family seemed to feel no shame at all. It was acting to keep a child alive.

In Pvt. Huynh's last letter home, he noted: "Little brother has reached draft age, hasn't he? I think you should keep him home one way or another. Don't let him enlist in one force or another, because it will be a miserable life—and please tell mother not to be too harsh with him or he may get angry and enlist himself and then it would be terrible."

Italians Suspend Import Deposits On Farm Goods

BRUSSELS, July 22 (Reuters)—Italy today suspended its import deposit requirement for most farm products, an EEC spokesman said here.

At the same time, it increased its guaranteed prices to farmers by 12.5 per cent. Both decisions were in line with agreements reached by the agriculture ministers in Luxembourg last month to exclude farm goods from the import deposit plan, which Italy introduced in April to help relieve its balance-of-payments deficit.

Although Italy will be able to maintain the deposit on beef imports from its partners, it will reduce the rate of deposit to 25 per cent from the present 50 per cent level.

The increase of guaranteed farm prices in Italy means a corresponding reduction of border taxes on its farm imports from EEC partners by 12.5 per cent. This will affect cereals, eggs, poultry, dairy products and wine.

Mental Clinics Said to Torture Children of GIs

WASHINGTON, July 22 (UPI)—The Pentagon is paying for psychiatric care for servicemen's children at institutions that allegedly torture the young patients, according to a Senate subcommittee staff report.

Sen. Henry Jackson's Permanent Investigations Subcommittee begins hearings tomorrow on the charges.

The Washington Democrat called the allegations "shocking" and said that the Defense Department "must be held accountable."

Pentagon spokesmen said that it would be "inappropriate" to comment on Sen. Jackson's disclosure. But they acknowledged that officials of the Civilian Health and Medical Program for the Uniformed Services, a medical insurance program for military dependents, had been summoned to testify.

Cardin's View of Fall—
Witty, Spirited Fashions

By Eugenia Sheppard

PARIS, July 22.—Paris isn't pulling its punches about the length of clothes. Hems today have been anywhere from two inches below the knees at Scherrer to just above the ankles at Cardin. European women like them that way, and the rest of the world is still free to do as it likes.

At Cardin, whose tall collection opened this morning, it was like the old, exciting days back in the sixties. Cardin, who has been more involved with Space, as he calls his Paris theater complex, than with clothes recently, has come back to earth. Never afraid to be bold or shocking when he's in the mood, he has designed a collection that has spirit, wit and his associate André Oliver has added lots of charm. Every fashion lover should see the collection.

It only because it's a great show. Cardin dramatizes the new lengths superbly. His models look 7-foot tall with high pillbox hats, and often platform boots and shoes. One of the most out there in Paris is the diminutive, doll-size model who used to be cherished at houses such as Cardin and Dior. The newcomers, believe me, are Amazons and they are well equipped with generous chests.

Probably because daytime clothes have been in the doldrums and most designers have forgotten them completely, they look especially new and exciting in Cardin's collection. He has always liked capes and this is the year for them. He makes them of tweed, knit, jersey, soft wool and sheer fabrics for evening. None of them is overpowering.

Many of Cardin's capes cover what is one of Cardin's great contributions to the daytime look—the chemise dress back again as a possible uniform to succeed the sweater and skirt. Two of Cardin's chemises are just slightly tucked and fitted in front to break the long, straight line. Others, like the knit dresses, fall straight to a flare at the hem. Like all coats this year, Cardin's are big but well balanced. They are either small at the top with a big circular flare through the body, or they are broad-shouldered with slim hips.

He uses many patterned wools and knits. Ankle-length geometric printed wools—don't ask me where you would wear them—have knit sleeves and bands of corded knitting around the hems. Patterned coats, also geometrics, have their own dresses but in another pattern.

Though most of the clothes are big, many of Cardin's dresses are slim and slightly draped for a more shapely silhouette. They are indented at the waist and outline the hips. Many of the skirts are caught in to almost a hobble. It's just the prophecy of a look now.

Cardin's evening clothes, for which his associate André Oliver gets the credit, are more beautiful and romantic than ever. Some of the loveliest are the pleated chiffons draped diagonally and with uneven hemlines.

Dior

Marc Bohan, Dior's designer, is becoming more sure of himself each season. He was in top form for the collection that opened this afternoon.

Because the house of Dior dresses most of the world's famous partygoers, more than half the new fashions were for dinner and dancing. Even so, Bohan managed to put over the suit as an important fashion for fall.

Though most of his daytime clothes are on the soft, voluminous side, it's obvious that he, too, senses the passing of the oversized look. His most exciting suit is the spare little tweed with a short jacket and a skinny skirt, the kind of thing you might call an English walking suit.

For evening, Bohan also plays with a skinny little shape. One-piece jumpsuits, or bare-top pullovers with shoulder straps, mode of printed satin crepe, end in skinny little pants just above the ankles.

Dior's fabrics couldn't be more luxurious and the colors are lovely. One that Bohan uses most frequently is somewhere between peach and rust but not quite either.

The coats are big with very wide sleeves which are often cuffed in badge or fox. Some of them have wide fur truxedos down the front and many of them stop at three-quarter length to show the dresses beneath.

For his dresses, Bohan uses more prints than usual in a winter collection. They include a pretty little cloverleaf, many little geometrics and a few big flowers.

The evening fabrics are all pleasant to touch, like the satin crepes, the chiffons and the velvets.

Sure to be seen everywhere next winter are Bohan's velvet dinner suits, especially the navy blue with the white jabot.

Bohan's winter prints on chiffons all have their own cover-ups, whether they are ruby red or black velvet cardigans or little smock jackets with gathered hanks in the same fabric. Most of the party clothes are the easy kind instead of the formal, dropped types of old. To go with them, Alexandre has designed a cropped halter which plays up the face but isn't too hard on it.

Scherrer

It was an unusually good day for Paris fashion, since Jean-Louis Scherrer's collection came in between the two giants. Not that Scherrer, himself, isn't becoming a giant. His clothes have now acquired an extra aura: Mrs. Valéry Giscard d'Estaing wears them.

Though the first lady of France couldn't come to the opening, her spirit was very much there. The designer's wife, Laurence, was in white crepe, which Mrs. d'Estaing prefers for all occasions. Some of the clothes, like the chiffons with big sleeves and pleated skirts, and worn with scarves wound around the head seemed to be designed for her.

Scherrer's collection may be small, but it's very much to the point. Though he says his inspirations have been old Russia and old Hollywood, neither is too pronounced.

Russia is represented by many soft suits with belted jackets. Hollywood is responsible for all the wide-legged evening pajamas, almost as wide as skirts, that go with belted, overblouse tops. The most beautiful are the white chiffons.

LONDON

Irresistible Royal Ballet Students

By Oleg Kerensky

LONDON (Herald)—The series of performances given every summer by the Royal Ballet School is a must for ballet goers. This year was no disappointment. No potential star shone this time, as Mark Silver did last year, but the general standard was excellent, with several young women and men who might well rise to the heights.

Peter Wright's "Arpeggio" to music by Beethoven was specially created for the students at their Covent Garden matinee, and then repeated during their weeks in two suburban theaters—Richmond and Wimbledon. (The Wimbledon engagement replaces the traditional open-air performances in Holland Park, which have been discontinued because of the unreliability of the weather.) It is a pleasant abstract work, showing off the pure classical training of the dancers, without making exorbitant demands on their technique. Lorna Murray and Denise Nunn, alternating in the ballerina role, both did extremely well. These two dancers also shone in MacMillan's "Concerto."

But the highlights of the Covent Garden matinee were the junior pupils doing English folk dances and the incredibly effective performance of Ashton's "Jazz Calendar." It's very rare to see English folk dances, in all their variety, performed by attractive young people who really can dance, and the children from the junior school do them with immense vivacity and evident enjoyment. "Jazz Calendar," with its sophisticated choreography, hardly seemed a likely work for students, but Denise Nunn and a very good-looking tall blond boy called Michael Batchelor even managed to make quite a bit of the sexy Sibley-Nureyev pas de deux; there was a new young comedian to take over Wayne Sleep's antics in the boys' ballet class.

'Boys at Work'

For the suburban performances, Richard Glasstone—one of the teachers at the school—concocted "Castro: Boys at Work," a display piece for the junior boys which cunningly mixed the humor of the "Jazz Calendar" ballet class with the display of classroom technique seen in ballets like Lander's "Roses." Indeed Glasstone ends his ballet, as

"Roses" begins, with plié at the barre, done in this case by the tiniest possible boy. The boys mock each other's encoignés and help each other out, and occasionally imitate the girls. The result is both amusing and instructive, and shows what a lot of potential male talent the junior school has. This work with its exciting dance climax, should be seriously considered for future Covent Garden School matinees.

There was also a version of Charles Kingsley's "The Water Babies," devised by Peter Wright, to give more of the small children something to do. This tale of a boy chimney sweep who falls in a river and has visions of nature was charming, but went on much too long. Also at Richmond, the senior students did Cranke's "Beauty and the Beast," with a most touching and charmingly innocent beauty in Gillian Scott, and Ashton's "Les Revenances," which is even in technical demands than "Calendar." Michael Batchelor, Claire Farnsworth could not manage the difficult solos, they may one day. Already it looked good with real stage presence, and several other dancers in the cast looked attractive promising too.

During intermission at Covent Garden I actually overheard someone say, "I prefer the school to the main company and I can understand the feeling. The students are not as polished or assured, and of course I have not yet had to face routine of regular performance all year round. But when they get their first chance to do in public, they have such enthusiasm, skill and charm that are irresistible; they do, in their own way, provide as good a dance performance as can be found anywhere, anytime."

Boulez, BBC Symphony Opens on a No-Nonsense Note

By Henry Pleasants

LONDON (Herald)—Pierre Boulez, as chief conductor of the BBC Symphony Orchestra, is obviously determined to show how the Proms have moved from their former "pops" format by insisting upon a no-nonsense inaugural.

Last year it was the Brahms Requiem and Stravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms." The 30th Proms season began Friday night at the Royal Albert Hall with Haydn's "Ermanno e Cecilia" and Schubert's Symphony No. 9 in C major. It will conclude tonight at Sept. 14, bringing some 54 conductors, 30 orchestras, including Los Angeles Philharmonic on Sept. 4, seven complete operas more British music than ever before.

The opening was also an inaugural for a newly and handsomely redecorated Royal Albert Hall. This was, and will continue to be, a feast for the eye. But while refurbishing has improved the appearance, it has not reduced its size. While Mr. Boulez's decision to perform Haydn's last mass with the orchestra and the 1 singers reduced to chamber proportions was historically correct, was ill suited to the spatial and acoustic dimensions of a cavernous auditorium seating 4,000.

A tidy performance typical of Boulez, and dominated by radiant soprano of Stella Armstrong, was heard as if from a distance. The notes were all there, in the right place and articulated knowing and fastidious musicianship, but the dramatic impact of Haydn's finest mass was missing, and the reception correspondingly subdued.

The ovation of the evening was reserved for the appearance of Sir Adrian Boult, founder of the BBC Symphony in 1930 and chief conductor until 1959, now 83, to conduct the Schubert's "Phony." Sir Adrian seems agitated. He stands as erect as ever, ducting in the precise, rather haughty manner he acquired from his studies with Arthur Nikisch in Leipzig 30 years ago. He led his old charges in a characteristically precise, affective and, for the acoustics of the hall, conspicuously understated performance.

A message from T. Murano, President of Sanwa Bank

Sanwa's 40th Anniversary in December 1973 was culminated by completion of the Sanwa Tokyo Building, a towering symbol of Sanwa's growth during the past 40 years.

Throughout this period we have striven to serve faithfully the entire customer spectrum from the single individual to the giant corporation. We have endeavoured to make a real and lasting contribution to the development of a healthy economic society both domestically and internationally.

With the objective in mind of "making our 40th Anniversary more meaningful by bringing greater happiness and prosperity to future generations" as a guideline, we have improved customer service at home and abroad, consolidated management, and strengthened the managerial structure.

Internationally, we have opened a new branch in Brussels during the last term. In Hong Kong and various cities of Brazil, Iran, Indonesia, and the Philippines, we have established financing or leasing companies as joint ventures with foreign financial institutions, and in some cases engaged in capital participation. Through our global network we have provided comprehensive financial services, including medium- and long-term loans.

Domestically, we have strengthened the marketing structure and reformed the administrative organisation to improve service and efficiency. In the past three years, the volume of business has increased 33 percent and the number of employees only 11 percent.

We extend heartfelt gratitude to all our foreign correspondent banks, customers, and shareholders who have supported us. To continue to meet fully the ever increasing needs of our customers and society in general, we are determined to spare no effort in the months and years ahead.

THE RECOGNITIONS

By William Gaddis. Bard/Avon Books, 1971 pp. $2.55.

Reviewed by Tony Tanner

WILLIAM GADDIS' "The Recognitions" received little attention when it first appeared in 1955, perhaps because it seemed so inaccessible. It is certainly a complex structure, rather like the monastery that figures near the beginning and the end of the book. "With turreted walls, parapets, crenellations, machicolations, battlements, a harrowing variety of domes and spires in staggering Romanesque, Byzantine effluence, and Gothic run riot in mutilated windows, window tracings, and an immense rose window whose foliations were so elaborate that it was never furnished with glass."

But if at times we feel lost, displaced, disoriented as we move through the complicated edifice of the book (just reissued in paperback by Avon Books), we are only experiencing analogically a loss that is felt in varying ways by all the characters in the book. In an age of unbelief and uncertainty, all stable, coherent architectures become problematical, and Gaddis is well aware of the implications of the metaphor.

The book ends with the literal collapse of a cathedral, and throughout Gaddis has been giving us a kind of topography of the disintegrations of the modern world. However, the novel itself is a massive act of integration. When we read, if we can have the experience described by one of the characters when he was looking at a Picasso, we find "everything was freed from one reality." The church falls; the book stands.

It is a novel about forgery of all kinds and all the ambiguities involved in the concept of "imitation." The main character, Wyatt Gwyon, abandons the idea of priesthood to become an artist, then gives up "that romantic disease, originality," to become a dedicated copier of a Flemish old master. His skill, which for him is initially applied as an act of selfless reverence, involves him with purely mercenary forgers for whom art values are indistinguishable from commodity values. This confusion between copying as a religious act of recognition and the forging of counterfeit creations for manipulation and exploitative purposes is central to the book. It is a confusion which results not only in forged money, faked pictures, plagiarized books, but also counterfeit emotions, pseudo beliefs, imitated speech, synthesized selves.

Life becomes a sort of ongoing central act of clutter, filling up with stuff at the same time as it seems to be coming apart and falling to bits. Stanley, another would-be genuine artist in the book, has a terror of "expediability." Everything wore out. What was more, he lived in a land where everything was calculated to wear out. He spends anxious hours watching a crack in his ceiling, a true, real, unentirely, and a student of the growing gaps and fissures in modern existence.

BRIDGE

By Alan Truscott

One has to go back almost 30 years to find a parallel to "The Complete Book of Bridge" by two British experts, Terence Reese and Albert Dormer, published in the United States by Saturday Review/ABC-CLIO, Inc. at $9.95. Its predecessor is the Outburst "Gold Book," a remarkable work in its day.

On the whole, the British work comes out better in the comparison. The authors have managed to cover the whole field of bidding in 219 pages.

In attempting to provide for a transatlantic readership, they have sketched a few vital areas, such as the forcing quality of second-round jumps by the responding hand, and omitted a few conventions of importance in the United States, such as the splinter bid. But these are minor flaws.

Slumping Dodgers' Lead Sliced to 5 1/2

LOS ANGELES, July 22 (UPI).—Willie Montanez, slumped to more Dave Cash in the eighth inning and Jim Tomlin pitched a six-hitter yesterday to give the Philadelphia Phillies a 2-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The victory by the Eastern Division-leading Phillies cut the Dodgers' lead in the West over second-place Cincinnati to 5 1/2 games. Los Angeles has lost seven of its last 10 games.

With the score tied, 1-1, Cash, 4 of the Phillies' eighth, hit a sacrifice fly from losing pitcher Al Downing. He was sacrificed to second by Jerry Browne and went to third on Mike Schmidt's single before Montanez delivered his game-winning hit to right.

Montanez improved his won-loss record to 12-9, striking out six and walking two. The Dodgers' only run off him was unearned in the second inning. Willie Randolph singled and was forced in second by Ron Cey, who went to third on an error by Cash and scored on Bill Russell's single.

Mike Anderson led off the Philadelphia third with his fifth one-run of the season to tie the score.

A helmet promotion crowd of 3,110 gave the Dodgers a season attendance of 1,592,004 after 31 days. The Dodgers are the first major league club to hit the 5 million mark this season.

finished up to give the Giants a 2-0 victory over Montreal and a sweep of a doubleheader. Jim Barr pitched a six-hit shutout to win the first game, 4-0.

The Giants scored in the third inning on a walk to D'Acquisto, singles by Mike Phillips and Chris Speier and a sacrifice fly by Gary Maddox. They got their other run in the seventh inning on a single by Gary Matthews, a balk by losing pitcher Steve Rogers and a single by Chris Arnold.

In the opener, Maddox drove in two of the San Francisco runs and was aboard and in the fifth with Winfield on base.

Winfield had singled in a pair of tallies ahead of McCovey's second homer.

Bill Grief started for San Diego but was removed in the eighth after giving up four singles and two runs. Randy Jones came to his rescue to halt the Mets. The victory was Grief's fifth in 15 decisions. Harry Parker, now 3-0, was the loser as San Diego drove him from the mound in the fifth during its four-run rally.

Rangers 2, Red Sox 1

At Arlington, Texas, Jeff Burroughs broke a seventh-inning tie with a two-out single to give the Rangers a 2-1 victory over Boston. Singles by Jim Sundberg and Alex Johnson off Bill Lee preceded the single to center that gave Burroughs 73 runs batted in for the season.

At Chicago, designated-hitter Deron Johnson blasted a grand slam home run off reliever Terry Forster with two out in the ninth inning to cap a five-run ninth inning to give Milwaukee a 5-3 victory and doubleheader split with the White Sox.

Dick Allen powered Chicago to a 5-2 victory in the opener with his 26th homer and two doubles to extend the White Sox winning streak to seven games, longest by an American League team this year.

Stan Bahnsen pitched no-hit ball for the first 6 1/3 innings for the first time in his career before leftfielder John Briggs lined a single to right.

John Vukovich and pinch-hitter Mike Hegan singled to lead off the ninth. Bahnsen then retired Robin Yount, but White Sox manager Chuck Tanner lifted him as Briggs stepped to the plate again. Forster struck out Briggs but George Scott singled to score a run. Darrell Porter walked to load the bases and Johnson homered.

Besides Allen's power display, Billy Melton hit his 14th homer in the fourth inning, for the White Sox.

In the opener, Jim Kaat, Chicago's 35-year-old left-hander who has not since June 2, got a 2-0 cushion in the first inning and rode it to his seventh straight victory. He hiked his record to 11-5, and Forster, who went the last 2 2/3 innings of the opener, recorded his 15th save.

Perry Well-Rested for Start

American League Takes All-Star Game Seriously

By Joseph Durso

NEW YORK, July 22 (UPI).—Baseball will stage its 45th All-Star Game tomorrow in Pittsburgh with a new sense of urgency beneath the glitter. The American League, which has lost 9 of the last 11 games to the National League, has enlisted its 12 stars to an official policy of winning at almost any cost.

"We talked with Dick Williams and we've agreed to concentrate on winning," acknowledged Lee MacPhail, who inherited the midsummer slump when he became president of the American League last year. "It's important that the team be on the field. I told them that winning comes first, keeping the players happy."

Not only that, but the American League was asked to use their regular pitching rotations so that any pitchers indicated for the All-Star Game had plenty of rest.

So, when the stars start to shine tomorrow evening in Three Rivers stadium before 50,000 fans, Gaylord Perry of Cleveland will open a pitching for MacPhail's side in five days' rest. The Dodgers' Tom Seaver will start for the National League.

The new aggressiveness results from the lopsided trend in the series in recent years. The American League won the inaugural game in 1933 on a home run by Babe Ruth, took 12 of the first 16 but then began to lose. Now it hasn't won since 1971 and has fallen behind in the rivalry with the National League, 25 to 13 with one tie.

Last year's game in Kansas City merely prolonged the problem. Williams, then manager of the world champion Oakland A's, lost his appendix five days before the game, then lost the game, 7-1.

The starting lineups for the game are picked by the public, while the rival managers select the pitchers and the rest of the two squads. In the nationwide polling this year, Reggie Jackson of Oakland led with a record-breaking total of 3 1/2 million votes. In the National League, the 40-year-old hero of the Atlanta Braves, with more than 2 1/2 million. For Aaron, who broke Ruth's career record of 714 home runs in April, this will be his 24th and final appearance in the mid-season gathering of the stars.

By custom, the managers of the All-Star teams are the managers of the previous year's pennant winners. This time, the designations fell to Williams and Yogi Berra of the New York Mets, though Williams made it by a scrupulous route. He resigned from Oakland after the World Series, set out the first three months of this season, then signed with California just in time to reclaim his All-Star spot from Earl Weaver of the Baltimore Orioles.

Although the National League has not embarked on any open policy of "aggression" to win, Berra did show some leaning in that direction this week. He chose eight pitchers, but did not include Tommy John of the Los Angeles Dodgers, who had a 13-and-3 won-loss record at the time and

Karl Is Victor In Golf Playoff

ENDICOTT, N.Y., July 22 (UPI).—Richte Karl, playing on the course that was his childhood playground, sank a 35-foot birdie putt on the first hole of a sudden-death playoff yesterday to beat Bruce Crampton for the $150,000 D.C. Open.

A part-time member of the pro golf tour who had failed to qualify for three of the last four events he tried to enter, Karl appeared to have lost his bid for his first tournament victory when he blew a six-stroke lead on the final hole.

Crampton, meanwhile, turned in a flawless round of 5-under-par 66 to complete his 72 holes at 11-under 273. Karl had a 68 for the final 18 holes on the En Joie Golf Club course.

Karl, who had earned only $1,008.25 in 13 previous tournaments this year, and $22,000 for his four-year career, picked up $30,000 yesterday.

Haynie Triumphs

LA GRANGE, Ill., July 22 (UPI).—Sandra Haynie bridged the last two holes for a 3-over-par 75 and a one-stroke victory in the U.S. Open golf championship for women. Her four-round total was 285, 7 over par.

Haynie, who had to come from behind, had rounds of 73, 73 and 74 before yesterday. Before she started play for the final 18 holes, she said she'd be happy to shoot a 72.

who promptly expressed indignation.

Yogi tried to explain his action in terms of game strategy, saying: "He was supposed to pitch Sunday for the Dodgers, so what good would it have been to me Tuesday? The game finally became set out the first three months of this season, then signed with California just in time to reclaim his All-Star spot from Earl Weaver of the Baltimore Orioles.

Among the others missing from the festive scene will be Tom Seaver of the Mets, who is suffering from a hip injury and who has won only six games this season, and Carlton Fisk of the Boston Red Sox, who won the poll for starting catcher in the American League. But Fisk, who has been injured much of the year, will miss the game because of a knee problem. His place will be taken by Thurman Munson of the Yankees and Jim Sundberg, a rookie from the Texas Rangers.

Bich Salvages Another Try for Yacht Challenge

By Parton Keese

NEW YORK, July 22 (UPI).—Baron Marcel Bich of France, who vowed in 1970 that he would never return for the America's Cup, has sent his boat to Newport, R.I., and will arrive there in August for the elimination trials with Australia.

The winner will meet the U.S. defender starting Sept. 10 for the Cup.

France, which lost to Australia in the 1970 trials, began building a new aluminum 12-meter yacht for this year's challenge, but changed his plan and will challenge with the same wooden craft.

France I, the defeated 1970 entry, sank in the Atlantic earlier this year, stayed there for two months and then was raised and "dried out" for her new challenge.

Paul Elvstrom of Denmark, considered the finest match-racing sailor in the world, was hired by Bich to skipper the French boat, along with a Scandinavian crew, but had a falling out with Bich and was released along with the crew.

Not Optimistic

It has not been a very good year for the French as far as the America's Cup is concerned. Though Bich, the millionaire ball-point pen manufacturer, went out and acquired the best available sailors in France, trained them rigorously in the Mediterranean and remodeled his boat, he is the first to admit that his chances of winning are not good.

"This time it is mostly for the experience," said Bruno Bich, one of the baron's 10 children and the spokesman for the French effort. "Our chances are reduced by not having a new boat, but if we fail, we still will have furthered our knowledge for the next challenge in '77 or '78."

When France I arrives in Newport sometime this week, there will be a rush of observers to see how she's changed. Most, if not all, will probably remark: "Why, she's no different than the last time," and they'll be correct. Except for a sharper line from bow to keel hidden under water and new masts and sails, France I is, for all practical purposes, the same boat.

However, a 12-meter yacht made of wood has to be somewhat different after spending two months at the bottom of the sea. "It was stupid," said Francois Bich, another son and the only member of the family serving on the crew, in speaking of the sinking. "There were only two men saved but while she was being towed: she was weighted down with masts and spars so that when the water got rough, she couldn't respond the way she was designed to, took on water and sank."

But the Australians should beware of becoming overconfident, even though they are ready with their new aluminum boat, Southern Cross. After watching the French crew train, seeing the champion skipper Jean-Marie Le Guillou and Claude Bigar, both former 5.5-meter world champions, operate and after observing the serious lengths to which the French have gone to achieve a first-rate challenge, it might be folly to discount them completely.

Sailing off Hyeres on the southern coast of France, the French raced against Constellation, a trial horse that retained the cup for the United States in 1964 with Bob Bavier at the helm. Constellation was one of the most beautiful 12-meter boats ever built. Constellation had been sailed earlier by Elvstrom and included many of his innovations.

When asked how France I compared with Constellation in their match races, there were no definitive answers. "Conny is no longer a true 12," said Robin Fulger, the maintenance director.

Elvstrom installed bicycle winches in Constellation, for one thing, but the French refused to copy the idea for France. "Bicycle winches are good for Danes," explained Bigar. "It keeps them warm in winter, and they have stronger legs. It isn't practical for us."

Though the Bichs run the show as always, the baron has so far stayed out of the limelight, leaving that to Francois and Bruno. He still appears sensitive to the ridicule he suffered in 1970 when he took over the helm in the fourth and last race and got lost in the heavy Newport fog.

Asked why he was returning after vowing never to again, Baron Bich replied: "There is, you know, such a thing as America's Cup disease."

Clough Becomes Leeds' Manager

BRIGHTON, England, July 22 (Reuters).—English League champions Leeds United has appointed Brian Clough—one of the most controversial figures in British soccer—to succeed Don Revie as manager.

Revie recently left the Yorkshire club to manage the English national team following the dismissal of Sir Alf Ramsey.

Clough agreed last night to join Leeds in a deal that left his long-time partner Peter Taylor to take over the management of Third-Division Brighton, a club the pair joined last November after they had resigned from Derby County.

A crowd of 10,000 turned out in the 25,000-seat Huddersfield Stadium.
